Greenwich Emotion Map

Jon Lebkowsky

November 7, 2006 9:06 AM

The Greenwich Emotion Map is a collaborative art project using BioMapping to chart an emotional landscape. Members of the community borrowed BioMapping devices and went for walks. The devices measure Galvanic skin response throughout the walk, and this suggests emotional response along the path of the walk. "The resulting maps encourage personal reflection on the complex relationship between us, our environment and our fellow citizens. By sharing this information we can construct maps that visualise where we as a community feel stressed and excited." The map can be viewed either as zoomable Flash or via Google Earth. You can also download a 20MB pdf. [\[Link\]](#)

Please note that comments will remain open for only 14 days after the article is posted. While previous comments will remain visible, attempts to post new comments after this period will fail. This helps stop comment spam, so your forbearance is appreciated.

*The Worldchanging comments are meant to be used for further exploration and evaluation of the ideas covered in our posts. Please note that, while constructive disagreement is fine, insults and abuse are not, and will result in the comment being deleted and a likely ban from commenting. We will also delete at will and without warning comments we believe are designed to disrupt a conversation rather than contribute to it. In short, we'll kill troll posts.

Finally, please note that comments which simply repost copyrighted works or commercial messages will be summarily deleted.
